DORN ROSCHEN, THE MYTH. The birds sleep from their singing. The roses from their bloom; The wild beasts in the forest Accept their slient doom. The fountains in the carden Sparkle and leap no more: The bees forsake the blossom-Their busy toll is o'er.

The moths dream on the rafters, The revelers in the hali. And thorns of keenest crystal Grow thick above them all. Sicep till the Prince of Passion, With burning eves and month His light feet shod with swiftnes Comes from the fateful South. Thy wells shall stir with fever. Thy face with bloom grow bright, And the love-lips of thy lover Awake thee to delight.
